It is a state of mining camps and towns with a constantly shifting population and no assurance of permanency. In fact, rather the reverse. As an instance, camps which a few years ago had a population of 6,000 or 7,000 are not even on the map today. Goldfield, which had 20,000 six years ago, today claims 2,000 people in it. It is ever the total and finds this combination of both in Dutch art.

This nation led the way in the struggle for liberty and though they fought for 80 years to achieve this they kept war out of their pictures. The real concern of life to them was prosperity and efficiency.

Mr. Caffin then went on to show how art and efficiency are bound together.
